MOREY SAINT-DENIS

TASTING

A very round wine that opens up easily and is really quite charming, even. Could that be the influence of the terroirs of Chambolle-Musigny, not far away?

AGEING

A very round wine that opens up easily and is really quite charming, even. Could that be the influence of the terroirs of Chambolle-Musigny, not far away?

MATURING

Relatively delicate, with no brutality and discreet, as far as new oak is concerned. It wouldn't take much to lose the elegance and upset the balance of this wine.

VINIFICATION

Careful sorting of the harvest is necessary; given the natural softness of the wine, the extraction of the grapes can be taken a little further. They react well to this treatment.

VINES

The vines are middle-aged but productive, nonetheless, tending to give quite big grapes. A great deal of vigilance is called for, but it is rewarded, as the ripening is excellent.

SITUATION

There are two plots, one situated "en Chenevery" and the other "au Clos Solon", two lieux-dits in the centre of the village, just below the premiers crus. An excellent situation, therefore, for a village appellation: Morey shares with Gevrey the characteristic of having plots classified as village appellations on the eastern side of the D974, although that's not the case for us.
